The Spenders is one of the most readable books of recent years. For months it was the largest seller of any book in the United States. Its humor is delicious and the charming love story told with feeling and dramatic power makes it a favorite with the reading public. It was only by rare good fortune that The Tribune has secured the serial rights to this story. The first installment will appear sometime in January and we promise our readers a great treat in the story.

We spent two days in Hiawatha this week, half of the time we were waiting for a train. Great town that. We usually call on Ewing Herbert but he has recently acquired some kind of type setting machine so we kept away from him. Another friend down there whom we usually call upon has a two weeks old baby boy, so we spent the time round the hotel listening to the traveling men get humorous with the ladies of the dining room.
